ENGLISH AND CHINESE
DICTIONARY.
WITH THE CHINESE MANDARIN EXPLANATIONS.
An Anglo-Chinese Dictionary, published at the Daily Press Office, Hongkong.
For comprehensiveness and practical service the work stands unrivalled. All the new words which the Chinese have of late years been compelled to coin to express the numerous objects in machinery, photography, telegraphy, and in social economy, which the rapid advance of foreign relations has imposed upon them, are here given in Chinese. Each and every word is fully illustrated and explained, forming exercises for students of the most instructive nature. Both the Chinese and English pronunciations are given, the students being assisted by the best principle hitherto attained. The typography displays the success of an attempt to make the Chinese and English type correspond in the first of body, thereby effecting a vast economy of space, achieving a clearness not previously attained, and dispensing with those vast margins and costly spaces which have hitherto characterized Chinese publications.
To illustrate the great scope of the work the following facts are submitted for consideration:—

EXTRACTS.

I DOUBT IT.
When a pair of lips are upturned to your own, with no one to give about it, do you pray for endurance to let them alone? Well, maybe you do—but I doubt it.
When a little head is permitted to stoop, do you think you can keep it from stooping? Well, maybe you can—but I doubt it.
When a tapering waist is in reach of your arm, do you attempt to keep it from stooping? Well, maybe you do—but I doubt it.
When a woman's waist is in reach of your arm, do you attempt to keep it from stooping? Well, maybe you do—but I doubt it.

THE PRISONER OF THE VATICAN.
Leo XIII., therefore, will remain, as he has hitherto remained, a prisoner in the Vatican, which is the visible point of contention between the Italian troops and the Pope. And indeed, a Pope who does not determine to renounce this attitude within the first week of his Pontificate will never renounce it at all, such are the influences, both Italian and foreign, which surround him as time goes on. Moreover, it is very doubtful what sort of reception the Pope would meet with in the streets of Rome. The Italian Government would certainly be sure to excite the irritation of others, and the two parties would come certainly to blows, and probably to blows. It may easily be supposed that the Pope does not make the experiment. And yet it cannot be said that the Pope is the majority of the old citizens who adhere to the Pope. On the contrary, the municipal elections, in which the Pope does not forbid, but rather advises and encourages them to take part, show that the majority are not favourable to him. It is not an easy matter to obtain accurate information of the condition of the Italian people in America a century ago, but enough is known to assure us that the condition of the Italian people in America a century ago was vastly improved over what it was in the days when the Republic was founded and the wars of the American Revolution were on. Both as regards wages and the comforts of the labouring man, times were vastly improved for the better. In the matter of clothes and wages, the one-half what they are at present, and the other half what they were a century ago. A SINGULAR TRIBE.
In the Transactions of the Anthropological Society of Washington, some account is given of a tribe called the Inuit, who inhabit the coast of Alaska from Cape Nevenham nearly to Bristol Bay. The people are of an amphibious nature, and present some striking features in their economy which seem to put at defiance all recognized sanitary laws. The houses are built so close to the water, that the high tides frequently inundate them, compelling the inhabitants to huddle together on the roofs, sometimes for whole days at a time. Their usual home, however, is their skin boat, or "kialik," in the management of which even the very young children are perfect professionals. In fact the kialik is the peripatetic home of the tribe, and it is much more useful than an ordinary boat, inasmuch as when overtaken by a storm the kialik is run ashore and turned over on its side, so that the whole family can sleep under it. One peculiarity of the Inuit is that as long as the head is sheltered from the sun, the body protrudes undisturbed from beneath the skin of the boat, and may be seen with their limbs all radiating from the kialik, but their heads and shoulders invisible, is perfectly unique. To insure the body to exposure of all kinds is the chief education of a young Inuit, and no excuse is allowed to the part of the old people, who are very severe disciplinarians. The use of water externally is unknown to them, never bathe or wash their bodies, the cleansing process, such as it is, being only resorted to occasionally, when the men light a fire in the Kialik or conceal house, and jump about until they are in a profuse perspiration. They then apply liquid to their own skin, and rub it into the hair, after which they take a plunge into the water. It is singular, however, that with such dirty habits they keep their weapons and boats scrupulously clean, although they eat their food uncooked. What water they do drink is taken by preference from stagnant pools, where the fish are cleaned and often thrown in, and where they go to eat, fresh water with them, but prefer to drink sea water. Dirt and hardship are common factors in the lives of savage races, but the fact of systematically drinking salt water with impunity is, remarks a contemporary, an unparalleled feature.
